SNOBBY ATTITUDE WILL RUIN BUSINESS

Retail store owners and managers who expect to continue in business after the war will profit greatly from an eight-page bulletin just issued by the University of Illinois Bureau of Economic and Business Research—and by passing information on it to their clerks.

The "take it or leave it" wartime attitude of many clerks is doing permanent harm to their employers, the bulletin points out. Many customers who are invited to "leave" now may not come back later when once again there will be more merchandise than buyers.

Titled "Retail Sales Question, Objections, and Answers", the slim new publication presents facts and suggestions from a field survey of 125 stores in 33 communities ranging from small villages to large cities, and in 32 kinds of business.

"It may be possible at present to treat customers improperly and with little regard, but many customers have long memories," warns Prof. Fred M. Jones, author of the bulletin.

"The salesman who handles a customer without the same courtesy attention, and regard as he would in time of peace may pass from the employment of the store, but the customer identifies his attitude with the store. It may take years to repair or rebuild goodwill which is injured or destroyed."

The clerk who barks "Dontcha know there's a war?" or tartly states "The quality isn't what it was before the war, but you can't get any better elsewhere", inviting the customer to try, isn't a good clerk, even in wartime.

Frankfort Church Host To Monee Regional Meeting

There were 14 Congregations represented by their pastors and representatives in the various organizations in the churches at the fall meetings of the Monee Regional Conference of the Evangelical and Reformed Churches which took place at St. Peter's Church, Frankfort, last Friday.

In the opening devotions, Rev. Bizer, pastor of the Frankfort church, spoke on "The Ministry of the Master". He was followed by the Dr. Haulman of Akron, Ohio who presented "The Ministry of the Church", picturing the functions of the various boards, and projects. Later the group separated into sectional meetings for the Women's Guild, the Church Boards, the Sunday School and Youth Fellowship and the pastors. These were led by the various ministers.

In the afternoon the Rev. Rest of Elgin spoke on "Faith in Action". He showed the conference what the Synod was doing in real service and missionary zeal. He also introduced the Rev. P. Stock of St. Louis, Mo., who gave a very interesting review of how he and his church took a hopeless and discouraged congregation and developed it into a church with 1300 members. This was perhaps the high point of the conference, bringing practical suggestions. A Round Table discussion brought many discussions on church work and solutions of problems.

Dr. Halman brought a challenging message in the evening to an attentive congregation. It was the closing session of a profitable conference.

The Women's Guild of St. Peter's served dinner and supper to approximately 100 visitors.

Sicily Was No Cinch

By Quentin Reynolds

(WNU Feature—Through special arrangement with Collier's Weekly.)

Let's take a look at the whole Sicilian operation and see just how much of a push-over it was. It was undoubtedly one of the most daringly and brilliantly executed military operations of all time, with Americans, British and Canadians working in beautiful harmony.

It was a textbook operation, with the Tactical forces (Alexander in command) carrying out everything just as the Strategic forces (Eisenhower in command) had planned. The success of the landing on "D" day, which was July 10, and the rapid advance through Sicily during the following days far exceeded the hopes of our military chiefs. But it was not easy!

Our Intelligence told Eisenhower that there were about 335,000 German and Italian troops on Sicily. Eisenhower decided to land about 95,000 men on "D" day and then gradually increase his force as needed.

The First division under Gen. Terry Allen landed at Gela on the southwestern coast. This is a great fighting unit which has even won Montgomery's admiration, and Monty is not one to toss bouquets around—even to his own troops. The weather when they landed was what the navy boys call "force five," which means that a 30-mile wind was blowing.

However, Terry landed his men on time as he always does, with colorful, loquacious but fantastically courageous Gen. Teddy Roosevelt as second in command. They landed and advanced rapidly against pillbox opposition which they soon smothered.

Cruiser Beats Tanks.

Then the Hermann Goering division came at them hell-bent with tanks. The First had to fall back to the beach, where they would have fought it out to the end—and against tanks there could have been only one end. Happily, a cruiser offshore got word of what was going on, and opened up with its big guns against the tanks. It was probably the first time in military history that an engagement between tanks and a cruiser took place. Anyhow, they paid off on the cruiser.

The original plan called for Gen. Matt Ridgway's airborne troops to work with the First. However, on "D" day there was a big wind, and the lads who took to the silk were blown all over the island. Instead of being able to consolidate according to plan, the airborne lads ganged up in groups of six to ten and just improvised as they went along.

The beauty of our army, as I see it, is its infinite capacity to improvise. If the scheduled plan goes awry, the boys can dream something up on the spur of the moment. Mentally, our kids are elastic. That night the airborne lads just went a-wandering all over the landscape, popping off at anything they saw alive, and this considerably baffled the orthodox Eytie and German defenses, which didn't think it quite sporting.

If you think that I am blindly, hopelessly impressed by, and devoted to these kids of ours—if you think that I am prejudiced and completely lopsided on the subject of our American troops here in Sicily—why, you're absolutely right.

Any American who isn't deliriously proud of our army should have his head examined. I am just trying to say that they took Sicily! I know the British and Canadians had important parts, but we're not considering them for the moment) against great odds.

Acted Like Veterans.

But let one far better qualified than I, have the floor. Alex Clifford is the war correspondent's war correspondent. The brilliant Englishman, who writes for the London Mail, has studied warfare for many years. "I got the surprise of my life," he told me. "I've been with the veteran Eighth army for a long time and naturally didn't expect much from a comparatively green outfit like the First division. You can only learn to fight by fighting. But somehow this bunch had learned it without having many fights! In action they were cool, absolutely, and they acted like veterans!"

Then he went on, thoughtfully: "When tough artillery fire came at them, they didn't bunch up as green troops always do. They fanned out beautifully. They're good fighters, and cruel fighters, too, and they are the best disciplined outfit I ever saw."

"They storm a town and have a tough time with casualties and then they walk in. Instead of getting tough with the local inhabitants or with prisoners, what do they do? They share their chocolate, their cigarettes, with them, when all their instincts must be to slaughter them as they think of their own casualties."

Disposing of an Enemy Observation Post

A direct hit from this United States gun disposed of an Italian tobacco factory which was being used as an artillery observation post by the Germans. After successfully resisting desperate German attempts to defend Salerno, Allied forces steadily pushed northward toward Germany capturing strategic military and industrial towns.

Oil for Alaskan Highway Traffic

Oil for traffic using the new Alcan highway will be piped 550 miles from the huge underground lake of petroleum resources in the Mackenzie basin at Fort Norman. It will also serve ships along the Alaskan shore. Left: An inspector checks the welding on a section of the line. Marines Returning From Raid on Japanese

Col. Harry B. Liversedge and Lieut. Col. Samuel B. Griffith, left, lead a contingent of marines ashore after a raid on enemy positions on New Georgia Island. Constant pressure by Allied forces in the Pacific has pushed the Japanese from the Munda air field, Salamaua and Lae. These gains have been followed by constant raids on other enemy bases.

Japanese Chaplain

Lieut. Hiro Higuchi, of Japanese ancestry, who is a chaplain in the American army. He is a former native of Hawaii and the second Japanese chaplain to be commissioned. He is now attending Harvard university.

Human Bomb

Allen L. Gordon became a human bomb when a shell lodged in his left hip and did not explode. Navy physicians who removed it were faced with the possibility of an exploding patient. The dangerous surgery was performed successfully in the South Pacific. Gordon was standing at his post on an American battleship when he was injured.

Falls Down Bluff

After she fell down a 350-foot bluff in Palo Verde, Calif., Mrs. Lee Gloria Shuck lay on a narrow cliff edge for a day and a night before these soldiers and coast guard rescuers reached her.

It Still Flies

The excellence of American workmanship is shown by the many return trips made by our planes despite heavy damage. With this hole in its wing, a B26 bomber carried its crew back to their English base.

WASHINGTON, D. C. QUEZON ON THE JOB

It's bad news for the Japs that President Quezon of the Philippines is back in Washington. They knew—though it was not generally realized in Washington—that Quezon had suffered a relapse of his old illness, tuberculosis, which has plagued him off and on for 20 years.

Quezon was a well man at the time of Pearl Harbor. But confinement in the dampness of Corregidor, during the Jap attack, brought the illness back again. That was one reason MacArthur urged him to return to the U. S. in a submarine. When he came to Washington, Quezon was advised to take things easy. Instead he rushed into the official activities of Philippine Commonwealth affairs, not sparing himself.

His physicians advised him not to remain in Washington during the summer of 1942, nor last winter. But he remained nevertheless. Result was that last spring he suffered a further relapse.

Specialists were summoned, and Quezon was given the stern advice that he would have to get out of the humid climate of Washington immediately, if he wanted to live. Yielding to pressure, he went to Saranac, N. Y., and submitted himself to a rigid discipline during most of the past summer.

Quezon led the life of an invalid, sitting in the sunshine in a wheel chair, listening to the radio, or to his nurses as they read to him. Result of this regime was that the tuberculosis was arrested, and Quezon gained 12 pounds.

When the Japs heard of his relapse, they were ready to say to the people of the Philippines, where Quezon is still highly popular: "Look, this is the skeleton you pin your hopes to."

But today Quezon is back on his feet and back at his desk, still hoping to realize his one great ambition, to see U. S. and Philippine forces march into Manila.

SEVEN MINUTES TO WAR

Every day now, pictures are arriving in a little room in Washington which seven minutes before were in Algiers, 3,400 miles away. One day, just after the landing in Italy, 41 pictures came through the air and landed safely on top of the Pentagon building, in a little room marked "Confidential—Keep Out."

Inside that room is a little machine not as big as a typewriter, with a little cylinder on it. The cylinder spins around, exposing a negative to dots and dashes of light, and after seven minutes, the exposure is complete. From there on, it's merely a matter of developing the negative, and the U. S. public has a picture of the landings in Italy, or the surrender of the Italian fleet.

And ditto for the South Pacific. It is farther away, but the seven minute requirement still holds. From an unmentionable post in Australia, the dots of light flash into the little room, and you have a picture of General MacArthur flying in a bomber over New Guinea.

The pictures may have been taken by any one of the four photo syndicates—Acme, AP, INP, or Life—or they may have been taken by the Army Signal service. In any case, they can be telephotoed only by the official airwaves.

What would be a highly expensive daily transmission cost for the photo agencies is thus fully borne by the war department. Officials justify the cost in terms of keeping the public abreast of the war—in fact, only seven minutes away from the war.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Ex-Congressman Joe Casey of Massachusetts, now doing various inside jobs for the White House, recently made a political survey of New England, reported that Maine was so strong for Roosevelt's war policies that the only Republican who could beat him was Wendell Willkie. . . . Admiral Standley, U. S. ambassador to Russia, has cleared with the state department a significant speech in which, after praising Russian victories plus those of England and the United States, he says: "A victory for one is a victory for all." . . . Highly inflammatory remarks in Negro newspapers, some of them close to sedition, are being studied by the army. . . . Lew Douglas, war shipping administrator, was personally thanked by the President for the job he did in helping to smooth British and American general staff feelings at Quebec. There have been some very vigorous differences between them, and thanks partly to Douglas, things were smoothed out considerably at Quebec.

CAPITAL CHAFF

Winsome Molly Flynn of OCD recalls that on the day before Pearl Harbor she drove up to the White House door, on invitation to Mrs. Roosevelt's tea, and was told by guards, "We don't see your name on the list, but it's all right if you say so." Today, you can't get near the White House.

Among the canniest officials of OCD is Stanley McCandless, on leave from Yale university. At Yale, he was a stage-lighting expert. With OCD, he is a black-out expert.

"REGULAR" AGAIN AFTER 2 WEEKS!

"Cereal Brought Relief from Long Siege of Purgatives!"

Here's a sincere, unsolicited letter every disappointed "doser" will want to read:

"I was a sufferer from common constipation. Took pills or medicines of some kind, but got no lasting relief. Finally, I tried KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN. Have been eating it about 2 weeks now, and have stopped taking pills and things. My bowels move regularly every day. I am a KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN eater from now on!" Mr. Burl Brown, Warren, Ark.

How do scientists explain KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN's gentle-acting, amazing relief, so familiar to thousands? Simply this: Lack of certain cellulose elements in the diet is a common cause of constipation. KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN is one of Nature's richest sources of these elements—which help the intestinal flora lighten and fluff up the contents of the colon, for easy, natural elimination. Not a purgative, that robs the system of water. Not "roughage" that acts by "sweeping you out!" ALL-BRAN is a gentle-acting, "regulating" food!

Eat KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN regularly. Drink plenty of water. See if it doesn't give you the relief you've dreamed of. Insist on genuine ALL-BRAN, made only by Kellogg's in Battle Creek.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws a heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

BLACK SOMBRERO

by CLIFFORD KNIGHT

Margaret Nichols owned some property in joint tenancy with Kitty Chatfield. When Kitty died it meant $200,000 to her. She explains the situation to her friend, Barry. While they are talking, Elsa Chatfield, a niece of Aunt Kitty, drives up. Elsa had been disinherited at Aunt Kitty's death. Huntoon Rogers, a detective, asks what Aunt Kitty died of. He is told an overdose of morphine, but that the district attorney's office had their doubts as to whether the morphine was self-administered. Elsa, who admitted that she hated her Aunt Kitty, was "glad to be free of her and the centuries of no and cannot." Reed Barton, one of the last to see Aunt Kitty alive, was said to have had a motive.

CHAPTER II

The tires rippled on the pavement as we dropped down off the hills behind Hollywood and came presently to Laurel Canyon. Other cars flashed past. Laughter, song, earnest voices in wisps and snatches fell upon our ears and were swept away, but in none was there the note of deadly earnestness that vibrated in Elsa's voice.

We had started off from Dwight's amid laughter, Elsa in her working girl suit, which proved to be one of Margaret's street dresses. She carried an overnight bag the lightness of which she explained by saying: "Just pajamas, Barry. I have to have something." We had moved off down the curving driveway and entered the road which descended Hollywood's backdrop of hills.

She was very sure, this young woman with the almost golden hair, and eyes I believed to be gray, and which Dwight called blue.

"Put me down anywhere on Hollywood Boulevard," said Elsa. We had emerged from the winding canyon road and were speeding into Hollywood. "I start from there."

"It's eleven o'clock," I reminded her.

"It doesn't matter. Time never meant anything to me."

And so I dropped her on the boulevard. She flashed me a smile, patted my cheek with a soft, caressing hand, and skipped out to the sidewalk in that working girl suit and carrying the overnight bag with just pajamas, because she had to have something. The crowded sidewalks swallowed her up. I got into a traffic snarl. After a while it was broken up and I moved on.

Near Vine Street the crowd opened for a brief moment on the sidewalk, and there went Elsa, the working girl suit and the overnight bag. Then crowd, night, and the moving traffic contrived to shut her wholly from sight, and I drove onward reflecting upon things like bravery and courage and marveling at what we call youth. Wondering, too, about Aunt Kitty's overdose of morphine. For the district attorney, who was an old friend of mine, had asked me if I wanted to try my hand at the problem.

One usually dashes into a railway terminal. In the taxicab as one approaches, the demoralizing discovery is made that it lacks but three minutes until the 4:36 is due to leave, or the train for the White Mountains, or Seattle, or wherever it is you are going. By not waiting for your change, ommandeering a red cap and prodding him along, you gain the gate just in time to be numbered among the passengers. It is all right, of course, if you have the sporting instinct. Only fixed ideas occupy the mental processes once you enter the terminal. You grasp thoughts like luggage, tickets, gate, kiss somebody good-bye; and your legs do the rest.

I had just seen my sister and her two boys off for New York. I had driven them down in my own car, so there had been four minutes instead of three, and the boys had entered into the spirit of the thing. Therefore, we made the gate with a full minute to spare, which accounts for the word Anne was able to put in about Reed Barton.

"Where?" I asked, turning to stare back through the crowd which had closed in behind us.

"Over by the information booth. Here, kiss me good-bye, quick! Don't forget to write." The gate slammed and they all went running down the platform, boys, Anne, red caps, boiling and bobbing in a last melee.

The fact that Reed Barton was standing still had caught Anne's attention. He would be doing just that in the station when others were rushing about like ants in a disturbed anthill.

"I try to live with the fundamentals," he had said one night at Dwight's. "Simple things are more satisfactory. The world is befuddled with needless things, with complexities. They are so many that there is no longer room in life to live. I must have time for the contemplation of beauty."

"Finding beauty?" I asked, slapping him on the shoulder. He turned his gaze upon me, reaching slowly for my hand and said:

"I've just seen one of our slaves off for Mazatlan—Chesebro's slave. A mining engineer."

Somehow his words brought back that dreamy, sun-baked town far down the western coast of Mexico, and a vague wind of presence stirred uneasily within me as at the prospect of some horrible thing. It was one of those strange, unaccountable experiences; it caused an inward shudder which Reed Barton detected, for he looked at me inquiringly. But, instead, he asked, "Can you give me a lift out to Hollywood?"

"Yes, glad to have your company." We walked out to the car and climbed in. "Living in Hollywood now, Reed?" I asked as we rolled on out Sunset Boulevard.

"Yes, since father—died, in Pasadena."

I didn't say anything more just then, remembering the shock of his father's suicide. Beaten and penniless after a lifetime of comfort, the soft-spoken, courteous old gentleman had leaped into the Arroyo Seco from the Colorado Street bridge.

"Oh," he said after a moment, "you asked me at the station if I were finding beauty. I've found her." He motioned with his fingers as if he would wipe out the miles of pavement, the street lights, the December night itself, and bade me contemplate an address in Hollywood. "It's only a step or two off the boulevard. The place smells a little. They all do, with the cabbage of yesteryear. And of course there's chintz."

"Put me down anywhere in Hollywood Boulevard."

"There, too, is the haunt of beauty?"

"Chesebro sent me with some papers for her to sign. Had to do with her aunt's estate. But it was difficult to track her. She'd dropped out of sight, and I'd been hunting her for several weeks." I made mental note of the address as Reed Barton went on talking. "Ink on her fingers. Some on her nose too. Hair—you know how it would be—I mean, beauty won't yield even to disorder. That's Nature's way. But the color—I'm still trying to decide what it is. Drawing like mad. There were sketches all over the place. Clever things commercially. They'll get by easily. Probably make her a living. She signed up the things I brought without looking at them. 'Get out!' she said. 'Tell Jimmy the Cheese (meaning my boss), to let me alone.'"

I pulled into a parking lot at a restaurant on Vine Street. I was hungry. The excitement of getting a woman off on a long journey is fatiguing. Reed Barton said he wasn't really hungry, but he went in with me.

"Hello," called a voice from a booth. Huntoon Rogers was sitting alone over the dessert of a late dinner.

"Not brooding, are you, Hunt?" I inquired lightly, for there was a glumness about him. I introduced Reed Barton.

"No-o," he said hesitantly. "Sit down and let me enjoy your company."

"What's the trouble?" "Theme papers," he said with a wry smile. "They get me down sometimes and I'm driven to extremes. Therefore, I spent the afternoon looking over the files in the Katherine Chatfield case."

Reed Barton shot a quick glance at Rogers but said nothing.

"Find anything to interest you?"

"Yes. And no. It's one of those cases you keep coming back to, wondering what the answer is."

Reed Barton ate mechanically, like a man in a mild trance.

"Reed was telling me about Elsa Chatfield as we drove out from town," I said to Rogers.

"You know her, Professor Rogers?" Reed inquired quickly.

"I've met her."

"Interesting, isn't she?" He sketched briefly what he had told me on the way out. "You know," he concluded, "even when they clutch economic independence to their blessed little bosoms they haven't got all there is in life. Not even half. They've only got the beginning."

At the time it didn't occur to me that Reed Barton had never heard of the baby. I supposed, of course, he had, for he knew Elsa's friends. But it was revealed subsequently that, during the height of the gossip, he was in Mexico.

The conversation came back to Aunt Kitty Chatfield. Rogers asked if there had been any physical resemblance between Elsa and her aunt.

"None whatever," answered Reed Barton. "That is, as I remember Katherine Chatfield. I never saw the two side by side, however. As a matter of fact, I had never met Elsa until today. She must have been at home that night her aunt died, for I remember that the maid asked me which Miss Chatfield I wished to see."

"You were there that night?" inquired Rogers, his mild blue eyes coming to rest upon Reed Barton's face.

"Yes. You see, I'm one of Chesebro's slaves. At times only his errand boy, although I'm supposed to be something of a mining engineer. But I am required to run a great many personal errands for Chesebro. I think I took Miss Chatfield a book—something that had interested Chesebro, and which he wanted her to read too."

"I see," said Rogers. "And she died that night?"

"Yes. She killed herself some time that night."

Rogers was silent for a moment, then he looked at me. "There's one chap from the police department in Pasadena whose report interested me, Madison. He says that he smelled chloroform faintly when he went into the room to investigate. That was several hours afterward. No one else smelled it, however. It might have been an overactive imagination, for there was no odor of it noted in the autopsy report. But chloroform is peculiar in that respect; the odor is not necessarily present even at autopsy in a death from chloroform."

"Yes, of course," I said.

"You're not by any chance thinking that Katherine Chatfield was murdered, Professor Rogers?" inquired Reed Barton.

Rogers smiled faintly. "I have no opinion, Mr. Barton. The case has been closed for over a year now. Who am I to stir it up at this time? The police were satisfied that it was suicide; there were no fingerprints, except her own, on the hypodermic syringe she used, or on the bottle in which she kept her supply."

"I guess I was one of the last to see her alive," said Reed Barton after a short silence, looking beyond Rogers to a group making merry in an opposite booth. "I've since been glad it wasn't murder. The police might have made it uncomfortable for me; they could have saddled a motive on me that I couldn't have denied. Because Katherine Chatfield killed my father just as much as if she had pulled a trigger. Things were looking up, you know. Father had struggled all through the worst of the depression to keep things together; he'd managed somehow to make the interest payments to her. She held a mortgage, you know, on all he had. Even as little as a two months' extension would have seen him out of the woods. But—you know, there's no Shylock like a woman Shylock—her pound of flesh must come from the heart. And—so," he shrugged his shoulders, "father jumped." He went on after a moment: "The police could have said I hated her. But I don't think I did."

Dwight Nichols tapped the ash from his cigarette and looked away through the gathering dusk across the vast Pacific into which the sun's dark red ball had sunk. The air was humid; small waves lapped wetly on the damp sand. Indeed so all-pervading was the feeling of wetness that I fancied I could push off from the veranda rail of the beach club, where Dwight, Huntoon Rogers and I sat, and swim out across the lawn. Two screaming children had been engaged in a feud on the beach and the mother with difficulty was now bringing them toward the club house. Dwight seemed more interested in them at the moment than in my remark about Kitty Chatfield, for he drew twice on his cigarette before he replied:

"Oh, I should say that Katherine Chatfield might have been forty-one or two when she died. She was not old."

"According to the files," Huntoon Rogers said, coming to life after long contemplation of the sea, "she was forty years and ten months old."

"But Elsa—" I began.

"I am coming to her. We are always getting back to Elsa. There was new blood with Elsa's mother. It was an alien strain to the Chatfields—new and fresh and vigorous, like a clear mountain stream flowing into a sluggish river. Sam Chatfield married his stenographer. That sort of thing is heroic. It does violence to family traditions; it puts a terrific strain on family pride, but biologically it is a good thing, provided it doesn't become a habit. Sam didn't reason things out quite like that. He loved the girl, which is much simpler, and so he married her. He was young."

REVERENCE FOR GOD

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:3-7; Matthew 4:10; 6:9; John 4:23, 24.

GOLDEN TEXT—God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.—John 4:24.

The first three commandments bring man into the presence of God, where he is taught how to worship God in spirit and in truth.

"The first commandment (Exod. 20:3) bids us worship God exclusively; the second (vv. 4-6) bids us worship Him spiritually. The first commandment forbids us to worship false gods; the second forbids us to worship the true God under false forms" (Farrar). The third commandment (v. 7) indicates that true worship will deal reverently with the name of God.

Israel had lived among the Egyptians, a people known for their worship of images, and were about to enter into Canaan where there were many false gods. The Lord was therefore careful not only to forbid the worship of other gods, but also to forbid the making of images of any kind, whether they represented the many gods of heathendom, or were attempts to symbolize the true God.

I. The Command to Worship (Exod. 20:3-7).

God first claims the entire devotion of man. If He is Jehovah, the Lord God, it is obvious that there can be no other god before Him. He is a personal God (v. 2) with whom it is possible for man to have fellowship. He must come first in our thought and our love.

The second commandment expressly forbids idolatry in any form. The injunction is twofold. (1) Men are forbidden to make any material likeness which to them represents a being to be worshiped. It matters not whether it be an image or what men believe God to be like, or the image of an angelic being, a heavenly body, in fact, "anything that is in the heaven above," or on the earth—such as a man or animal; or under the water—such as a fish. (2) If such objects have been made either by ourselves or others we may not bow down to them, nor render any service to them. Let us all examine our religious ceremonies and practices in the light of God's commandment.

Observe that obedience to this command brings rich blessing to "thousands" (v. 6), whereas disobedience is a curse not only to the man who disobeys, but also to his descendants.

The careless, vain or irreverent use of God's name is forbidden (v. 7). How common that practice is today, even among Christian people. If we do not actually use His name, we use some slang expression which stands for His name.

Now we turn to two passages from the Gospel of Matthew to see how Jesus practiced these commandments.

II. The Example of Christ (Matt. 4:10; 6:9).

To the temptation of Satan, offering rich reward for an act of worship to himself, Jesus gave prompt and effective reply by quoting Deuteronomy 6:13. Thus He gave His approval to the command that all our worship and service is to be given to God.

This spirit shows itself in the reverent devotion of the prayer (6:9) which Jesus taught His disciples. The name of God is to be hallowed—that is, to be regarded as holy. No one set a higher example of that than our Lord. Himself God, He was obedient to the Father, even unto death, always doing those things which pleased Him and honored His name (John 8:29; Phil. 2:8).

III. The Manner of True Worship (John 4:23, 24).

God is to be worshiped in spirit and in truth, not in dead formalism or by empty ritual. There must be reality in such devotion.

One would suppose that a truth so obvious and vital would long since have been completely saturated the life of the church as well as of the individual believer. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

Even today, countless men and women still believe that worship has something to do with place (vv. 20, 21) or race (v. 22) or some other external device or formula. What a pity, when the gracious and delightful way to worship is through personal spiritual communion between God and man.

Deadening formalism is not our only enemy. There is the powerless preaching of modernism—and in all honesty must we not admit that even some so-called fundamentalism has in many respects lost the true spirit of the faith for which it rightly contends.

We see then that the commandment of God regarding reverence is not just a law on a faded page in an ancient manuscript. It is a living, vital reality, operative today.

RIGHT "in step" with the times is this crocheted footwear. It's economical to make (the soles are crocheted of rags) . . . it's quick to do . . . and it launders perfectly. Make the scuffs for bedroom slippers; the open-toe style for play shoes.

Make an oilcloth cover for your ironing board to cover it when not in use; also use the cover when brushing and sponging garments.

Never add soda when cooking vegetables, because it destroys those precious vitamins, B1 and C. Cook vegetables quickly and they will retain their bright color.

To mend broken glassware, dip it into melted powdered alum. Remove it and hold the pieces together with adhesive tape until the alum has hardened.

When babies shoes become dangerously slippery, sandpaper the soles to prevent falling.

A cork when soaked in hot water—even if it is a little too large—will fit a bottle readily.

A dustless dustcloth may be made by pouring one tablespoon of furniture polish into a glass fruit jar and shaking jar until polish is well coated on sides of jar. Put into jar a yard of clean cheesecloth, cover jar, and let cloth remain in it for two or three days.

Do not wash eggs. Washing destroys the protective film that keeps out air and sun.

Pattern 327 contains directions for the slippers in small, medium, large size; stitches; list of materials.
Due to an unusually large demand and current war conditions, slightly more time is required in filling orders for a few of the most popular pattern numbers.

Dear Friends:
Was very glad to hear from you. I have been in Texas 4 months. I don't like the state at all. For one thing its too hot down here and the people are too much for themselves.

Well anyway we don't get a chance to get to town very much. If we do go to town there is nothing to see anyway. We go to El Paso and its all G. I.

We have been on the Desert for sometime. We don't get much time to write. We are always on the go. The spare time we do have we sleep. The heat is awful here. It gets to be 130 degrees and no rain.

Well Lu I wished I could be there for all the good times they are having. Thanks a whole lot for cigarettes you sent. By the way, I have written a couple of times telling them I am a Corporal. But I never see it in the paper. Please take note of it.

I say hello to everybody. I remain,

Cpl. Eugene J. Coffey, Btry. A, 129 C. A. B. N. (AAA), Fort Bliss, Texas.

Sept. 3, 1943

Dear Folks:
I am writing a few words to thank you for the package which I received the other day. Those supplies will really come in handy because my toilet kit was falling apart and my metal soap holder was getting rusty. It's always nice to receive something from your home town and know folks back home have not forgotten us.

I'm OK and thank you again.

Sincerely,
Pfc. Melvin C. Harcourt, ASN 36665917, 20th TSS, Lowry Field, Colo.

Sept. 3, 1943

Dear Folks:
I truly had a pleasant surprise, opening the package and finding the delicious candy. It could not have come at a better time. As we are on B rations, only powdered and canned foods, the candies are most welcome.

The Red Cross is doing a grand job. The Covina Junior Red Cross which is a little town near by, furnish us with a daily orange and not too frequently fresh tomatoes.

The Tinley Paper come regularly and enjoy reading about the home folks and again must say you have been most generous in including me. The paper is well read as I send it to my cousin Mae Boeyer Homan who lives in Glendale, Cal.

My stay here is not of a long duration will be moving soon. Hoping to go over seas.

Many thanks for your thoughtfulness and candy.

Sincerely,
Lt. Irene Hartman, ANC, 13th General Hospital, APO 180 care postmaster, Los Angeles, Cal.

OUR PLEDGE TO THE PHILIPPINES

Forty-five years ago the United States engaged in a war with Spain because of the way the latter country had misgoverned Cuba and mistreated its people. Admiral George Dewey was in command of a fleet of ships in China at the time and he was ordered by President McKinley to destroy a Spanish fleet in Philippine waters. He carried out orders and got the news through to Washington. Then the cables were cut and that was the last heard from Dewey for some time.

General Wesley Merritt finally showed up in the Philippines with armed forces and joined Dewey in the capture of the city of Manila, August 13, 1898.

Our lawful prize Cuba was turned loose and became an independent republic in 1902, but the Philippines likely never would have been seized if there had been radio communications to advise Dewey to keep on sailing the high seas. The provisional government of the Philippines is "in exile" in Washington.

We have paved Manila with professions of good intentions to make her free for nearly 45 years and there is a law about it fixing 1946 as the date for delivery of promised goods. President Roosevelt is in favor of knocking off two or three years of time on account of good behavior, and in his recent radio address he told the Filipinos that "their bravery at Corregidor and Bataan was the final proof of their fitness to be a nation 'equal to any on earth' ", and he added: "The President gives the Filipino people his word that the Republic of the Philippines will be established the moment the power of our Japanese enemies is destroyed."

That statement and promise will undoubtedly be approved by the Congress and receive the hearty applause of the people of the United States. Hasten that triumphant day!

There'll be more bed springs, kitchenware, furnaces, safety pins for civilians this fall, says WPB.

Goat's milk powder is on the market. Two teaspoonsful in a glass of water makes a glass of milk. Edible in dry form, too.

Plenty of hosiery for us women, say the manufacturers! Made of cotton and rayon they'll serve the purpose, but a far cry from the silk and nylon stockings days.

Maybe you'll be serving alfalfa soup soon! Experiments show it contains more Vitamin A than carrots, more C than lemon juice.

Washington experts say the approaching food shortage will make a harder job for inflation fighters. It takes about 30% of the average family's income for food.

For something different dress up your green salad with fresh tomato mayonnaise. Rub mixing bowl with garlic and mix 1 cup mayonnaise with 1 cup skinned tomatoes. Canned tomatoes will do—but be sure you use real mayonnaise, not salad dressing.

Enough milk was wasted through careless handling in 1942 to supply 1,116 soldiers with a pint a day for a year.

Quick-frozen baked beans are becoming popular, and will be plentiful, too.

$1,200,000 Treasury Bond Rally in 90 Minutes

Sponsoring one of the largest and most colorful War Bond rallies in Wall Street's history, members of the New York Curb Exchange, under the leadership of their president, Fred C. Moffatt, sold more than a million dollars of Treasury Bonds in 90 minutes. Leading professional athletes in the War Bond drive, Mel Ott (top left), manager of the N. Y. Giants; (top center) Alice Marble, tennis champion; (upper right) Fred C. Moffatt. (Lower right): Nat Tare, "Toughest kid in AEF of World War I," and recipient of the Croix de Guerre, at the age of 14, for saving the life of Father Francis P. Duffy. He also wears the Distinguished Service Cross and was wounded in World War II. Another contribution to the war effort, the Curb Exchange originated—five months before Pearl Harbor—a War Bond purchase plan which enables employees to buy Treasury Bonds with Exchange advanced money which they repay in weekly salary deductions.

Will Co., to Raise 3500 Tons of Scrap Metal

Another big scrap metal drive is getting under way and Will county's quota of this general salvage is set at 3500 tons. According to plans for the fall drive, it is expected that the county will reach its quota by Nov. 15.

Of the 1,240,500 ton quota, in addition to the 20 per cent of general salvage, it is expected to obtain 64 per cent from big industries and 16 per cent from processors.

Lt. Gov. Cross said scrap bins of the midwest's steel companies are getting dangerously low, according to WPB's general salvage division. Some mills, he said, have as little as an 18 days supply of scrap on hand.

Ninety-six cents out of every dollar goes for War expenditures. The other four cents goes for Government expenses "as usual."

To cooperate with the Government's nation-wide campaign to save manpower, transportation, fuel and critical materials...you are asked by the War Production Board to

Conserve Electricity

... as part of a voluntary program instituted by the War Production Board, the Office of Defense Transportation, the Petroleum Administration for War, the Solid Fuel Administration for War, the Office of War Utilities, and other governmental agencies.

WAR PRODUCTION BOARD WASHINGTON, D. C.

To Electric Utilities and their customers:

The War Production Board has proclaimed that maximum war production requires the greatest possible conservation of manpower, transportation, fuel, equipment, and critical material such as copper, steel, tungsten and many others—much greater than has been heretofore accomplished. It believes that this greater conservation can be accomplished by the voluntary cooperation of all citizens of our country in the effort. It has called for the institution of a program to effect savings on all home fronts by the Office of Defense Transportation, the Petroleum Administration for War, the Solid Fuel Administration for War, the Office of War Utilities, and other governmental agencies. These agencies have been developing the details of the conservation program.

Each principal industry and agency is organizing to carry the objective of the War Production Board to its members and they, in turn, to their customers so that the fullest conservation may be obtained. This is a definite challenge to each operating unit and each individual in the electric utility industry to do his or her share in backing up our fighting forces. We cannot exert maximum force against our enemies if waste on the home front is tolerated.

In the electric utility industry, the installed generating capacity, together with capacity now under construction, is ample to meet all foreseeable electric needs. But, it is essential to save the use of electricity wherever possible so as to reduce, directly or indirectly, the demands for materials, fuel, transportation, and manpower.

The Office of War Utilities, in consultation with representatives of the electric utility industry, both public and private, has developed a comprehensive program to achieve the objectives of the War Production Board within that industry.

The desired results will be obtained through the full cooperation of millions of people in the conservation program. With everyone contributing, the effect will be tremendous in hastening the day of Victory.

Sincerely yours,

J. A. Krug
Director
Office of War Utilities

SUMMARY OF THE VOLUNTARY CONSERVATION PROGRAM REQUESTED BY THE OFFICE OF WAR UTILITIES

Commercial and industrial establishments have been given requests from the Office of War Utilities for conservation in the use of electricity for—

- Indoor and outdoor advertising, promotional and display sign lighting—
- Decorative and ornamental lighting, including decorative flood lighting—
- Show window lighting which does not provide essential interior illumination—
- Lighting of marquees (other than advertising signs) and building entrances—
- Lighting of outdoor business establishments—
- General interior illumination and show case lighting.

In addition to these requests, general conservation in unnecessary use of electricity has been asked of all commercial, industrial and residential users. Among these are less reduction in temperature and relative humidity in air conditioning, elimination of waste in use of various electric appliances such as refrigerators, ranges, space heaters, water heaters and reduction in use of white way street lighting to lower levels consistent with public safety.

It is pointed out that in order to conserve critical materials used in the manufacture of light bulbs, the desired reduction in lighting should be obtained primarily by turning off lights which are not necessary rather than by substituting lower wattage lamps. Lamp bulbs should not be replaced until completely burned out.

Likewise, no effort is being made to curtail necessary military, aviation and police lighting, lighting essential to public health, including eyesight conservation and safety, plant protection, transportation and production purposes.

As outdoor recreational activities are considered essential for wartime morale, the use of electric energy necessary for this purpose is not being discouraged, although such economies are urged as can be achieved in these fields without impairment of function.

THIS LETTER asks the cooperation of the power industry and its customers in a broad effort to release critical resources for war purposes. It was accompanied by requests from the Office of War Utilities for conservation of electricity by commercial, industrial and residential users.

We are asking all of our customers to cooperate with us in this program, and we will be pleased to assist them wherever possible to meet its objectives.

The program is not intended to reduce lighting in building entrances, interiors and hallways below levels consistent with public safety—nor should lighting for industrial plant protection be reduced. Light for reading or working should be maintained at levels consistent with eyesight conservation. . . . This Company is glad to do its part in this nation-wide plan of the War Production Board for the conservation of critical resources.

Electricity has gone to war—don't waste it!

Rep. Fred Busbey Exposes Communist Activities

Boasting of its influence in official Washington, the Communist party Friday night openly threatened that the United States must knuckle under to a Communist Europe unless it plays the war game on Josef Stalin's terms.

Never has the threat of a separate peace between Russia and Hitler, to be followed by the domination of all Europe, and all the world, by the Communist party, been made so openly as it was at the meeting in the nation's capital.

To Representative Fred Busbey of Illinois goes the credit for this report on the meeting. Busbey, former Americanism chairman of the American Legion, Department of Illinois, attended the meeting.

Busbey heard a Communist speaker, Dixie Wilkinson, former Office of Price Administration Aid, who resigned from that New Deal Bureau to give his full time to the furtherance of Communist propaganda assert:

"The President freed Earl Browder from prison after pressure was exerted by a meeting of the Communist party in Washington. We hope that this meeting will be equally as successful in getting the President to support an immediate second front against Germany."

And Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, member of the National Committee of the Communist party in the United States, declared:

"The people of the United States seem to be willing to bleed the Soviet Union white."

"They seem to be willing to let the Soviet Union suffer first."

"If the people of the United States and their government continue to take this attitude, the people of Europe will recognize no one but the Soviet Union."

Busbey and other members of Congress declared that never before had the Soviet Union through its official mouthpieces in the United States, made such a direct threat to the future of this country and to others among the United Nations.

Speakers at this Communist meeting unleashed an almost unparalleled campaign of vilification against members of Congress who have fought the interests of the United States first, Busbey said. He quoted Wilkinson as saying:

"There are forces at work in America which are opposed to ending the war as early as possible. Those forces of defeatism, forces opposed to ending the war now, are Hoover, Senator Taft, Representative Cox, Representative Dies, Senator Vandenberg. Representative Fish."

"And, since his speech on the floor of the Senate, we must add the name of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. of Massachusetts."

The Communist leader referred to a speech this week in which Senator Lodge charged that the Soviet Union could bring the war to a speedy end and save thousands of American lives if it would give the United States the use of Siberian air bases against Japan. Informed of the Communist charges against him Senator Lodge said:

"I scarcely feel that they are worth commenting upon."

"However, if the Communists and if Soviet Russia wish to end this war quickly, let them help us save American lives.

"It will materially shorten the war if Russia gives us her Siberian bases, and that is one of the ways to shorten the war."

"I have great respect for Russia, and for the fight she has put up against Hitler. But I want our side to win, and Russia can help us to win by making it possible for us to drive Japan out of the war."

Lodge laughed at the charge that all who demanded Russia give the United States the bases from which Tokyo and all Japanese industry might be blasted were "defeatists."

Representative Busbey, said, however, it was obvious that Earl Browder, in his recent Chicago speech branding as "harmful nonsense" all talk of Russian participation in the war against Japan, had set the official tone for the entire Communist effort, Wilkinson, addressing Friday night's meeting said:

"I condemn the defeatist attitude of the reactionary press to Earl Browder's request for a second front."

The Communist charges, openly advanced by an avowedly successful Washington pressure group, brought the wrath of such men as Representative Robert Chipfield of Illinois, third ranking minority member of the House foreign affairs committee. Chipfield said:

"The time has come for a showdown with Josef Stalin. In the forth coming meetings between Stalin, Churchill and Roosevelt, the United Nations have got to talk tough to Stalin."

"That is the only language he understands."

All dealings with Stalin, he said, must be placed on a straight forward basis. Chipfield said:

"Let us tell him he can have his second front if he is willing to give us the bases from which we can bomb Japan."

"I hope that the proposition will be put up to Stalin like this:

"Mr. Stalin, you contend that you are unable to enter war against Japan now, because involved in the West against Hitler."

"Let's assure that that is true. But when we launch a second front we will divert many German divisions, thousands of German planes, untold quantities of German munitions and supplies from the Russian front to the Atlantic coast."

"When we do that, you can afford to run the risk of opening a front against Japan."

"We will give you the second front when we are ready, if you will give us a second front against Japan."

That, Chipfield said, is the only language Stalin understands. Chipfield brushed aside the Russian threat of a separate peace with Germany, as voiced by Browder in Chicago and echoed in Washington last Friday.

National Newspaper Week

(A guest editorial for National Newspaper Week by Kenneth E. Olson, dean of the Medill School of Journalism, Northwestern University.)

The Italian people had no heart for this war. They were dragged into it by a ruthless, ambitious dictator. But to bend the nation to his will this dictator first had to take from his people their most precious right—a free press. As early as 1922, Mussolini began destroying newspapers which dared to oppose him. By 1925 his control of the Italian press was complete.

Italians probably did not realize what they had lost. But soon they found that all their other individual rights were dependent upon this right. Once the press, representing the voice of the people against government oppression, had been stifled they found that freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, all personal liberties had gone with that key freedom. Now they were lied to, browbeaten, made slaves of a dictatorial state. Today in abject defeat, their country torn in battle between their oppressors and their deliverers, Italians are probably the unhappiest people in the world.

To most Americans this right of a free press is something we just take for granted. We "cuss" our newspapers as we "cuss" the weather and figure that freedom of press is just something that publishers rant about.

But freedom of the press is not a special privilege bestowed as a divine right on American publishers. They are but the trustees of a right that belongs to the whole people —the right of every American to know of those happenings which may affect his welfare.

Our founding fathers had had bitter experience with a tyrannical government rule which suppressed colonial papers that dared speak for the people. They knew that their new experiment in democracy could succeed only if there was a free press which could inform the people and warn them whenever their rights were threatened. And they wrote that right into the constitution as an inalienable right of the American people.

For 160 years this free American press, printing facts and reflecting the thinking of the people, daring to oppose government leaders wherever necessary, has given the American people the information which has enabled them to act in their best interests.

The purpose of National Newspaper Week is not to laud the American press but to stop for this once each year to reflect on this right which has enabled our democracy to endure and which has made our nation great and strong.

Today the American people know more of what is going on in their own country and on every battle front than do the people of any other nation. And they are strong in that knowledge for they know what they are fighting for. A free press and a free people are an unbeatable team.

MOKENA

Mrs. W. A. Campbell of Seattle, Washington, arrived in Mokena yesterday for a visit with her sister, Mrs. Wm. Semmler and family and with her brother, Theo. Oestreich and another sister, Mrs. Hugh Deamore of Joliet and their families. It has been 19 years since Mrs. Campbell has been back to her girlhood home of Joliet.

Mrs. Ruth Schneider of Chicago and Miss Roberta Bickley of Frankfort were guests in the Wm. Lowe home over the week end.

The Book of The Month Club meets tonight with Mrs. Bill Muehl-er.

We extend a hearty welcome to the new pupils who have come to our room from other schools. They are: Mary Cooney, grade 2, Park Manor School, Chicago; Barbara Geuther, grade 2, from West Frankfort, Ill., and Florence Burgeson, grade 3 Palos Park, Ill.

Intermediate Room, Mrs. Eleanor Ferguson, Teacher.

There are three new pupils in this room who have been transferred from other schools. They are: David Gode, grade four, from Round Lake, Ill.; Patricia McGinnis, grade four from San Antonio, Texas; Robert Cooney, grade 6, from a Chicago school. We are very happy to have these new pupils enrolled.

A new troop of Brownies will be organized Wednesday Oct. 6, under the leadership of Mrs. Ferguson. A busy year is being planned.

Junior High School, Mrs. Elizabeth Cappel, Teacher.

The total enrollment of the this room is 35 pupils. We are hoping to welcome Donna Williams of Fair-bury, Nebraska and Daniel Gode of Round Lake, Ill., to our room.

The new Reading Circle Books are being read and enjoyed by all the pupils. This is part of our English work.

The seventh grade history class has finished studying the "Exploration and Colonial Period" and will begin the study of the "Struggle for North America" this week. This will be worked out in a project.

One of the aims in our room this year is better attendance.

High School: Mr. Gerald Dunn, Principal, Mrs. Marie Knater, Teacher.

The present enrollment in the high school is 19 pupils. There are ten in the 10th grade and nine in the 9th grade. We have one pupil Lester Oakley, who has been transferred from Chicago, Ill.

The new librarian for the year is Doris Spiess and Lois Hutson is the assistant.

Special:

The Music Club will continue its meeting at 8:30 A. M., every other week on Tuesday. A short business meeting is held. This is followed by some sort of entertainment. The officers are: Donna Bueschel, president and Pattie Bennett, secretary. Pictures were taken of all the pupils on Sept. 20th. These were grouped by grades, samples should arrive soon.

In the Music Department the Intermediate grades are giving programs every Friday. Three pupils are selected to give musical numbers, and the class groups compose the audience. These are greatly enjoyed. Thursday Oct. 7, the 7th and 8th grades gave a "Stephen Foster Program" during their music period. Mrs. Cappel has been invited to be their guest.

Visitors to the school last month included Service Men, Gerald Bennett, Russell Bennett and Robert Benson, all former Mokena students. We are always glad to visit with our former students now in Service. They and their friends are always welcome.

WOMEN'S SERVICE CLUB NEWS

By Mrs. Leslie Clark

At the regular meeting of the Mokena Women's Service Club Monday evening the following committee was named to continue the purchase of articles for the Christmas boxes for our boys in this country: Mrs. Chas. Burkhardt, Mrs. Berle Needham, Mrs. Dave McMillon, Miss Elmira McGovney, Mrs. Harold Ebert.

This is the week we send cookies to the USO in Joliet. Please leave your cookies or cakes at home of Mrs. Berle Needham before 4 p. m. today, so that they may be sent on the 4:35 train.

Seaman 1st class Russell Bennett has returned to his post after a few days at home.

Hans Mueller who recently left for the Navy is also stationed at Farragut, Idaho.

Pfc. Robert Benson has returned to his base at Bauning Field, Neb., after enjoying a furlough at home.

We would like to remind our members again of the importance of sending in their Serviceman's latest address. If our boys are to receive their News-Bulletin and their Christmas package on time we must have their correct address. Just drop a card to the Women's Service Club, Mokena, Ill.

The Red Cross work room is now ready in its new quarters in the Irvin Howes' building on Front St. The hours are from 1 to 4 p. m. and 7 to 10 p. m. every Monday. There is an urgent need for workers as there are 5000 dressings to be made this month.

The Red Cross is calling for volunteers in another field also. Thousands of units of blood plasma are needed for our armed forces all over the world. It is hoped that every person who is able to do so will donate a pint of their blood. It may save the life of one of our own fighting men.

CARD OF THANKS

KOHL—Daniel. We wish to thank our relatives, friends and neighbors for their kindness and sympathy shown us during our recent bereavement in the death of our beloved husband, father and brother. We especially wish to thank the Rev. Mr. Goeken for his comforting words, the Ladies Auxiliary of the Wm. CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Unreality" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, October 3.

The Golden Text was, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" (Romans 8: 31).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "I am the Lord, and there is none else, there is no God beside me: I girded thee, though thou hast not known me: That they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none beside me. I am the Lord, and there is none else" (Isaiah 45: 5, 6).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "In the vast forever, in the Science and truth of being, the only facts are Spirit and its innumerable creations. As God Himself is good and is Spirit, goodness and spirituality must be immortal. If goodness and spirituality are real, evil and materiality are unreal and cannot be the outcome of an infinite God, good. . . . Whatever is valueless or baneful, He did not make,—hence its unreality" (pp. 479, 277, 525).

is the LAST DAY you can mail Xmas packages to SOLDIERS overseas
YOUR POST OFFICE WILL ADVISE YOU ON THE DETAILS

there IS a serious waste paper shortage!

and you can make it your patriotic duty to help in this present emergency by saving waste paper right now.

Only one-third of all the waste paper in this country is collected and reclaimed. It is up to every American to help salvage more of it!

BECAUSE... Waste paper is salvaged and made into paper boxes, cartons and shipping cases needed to send endless supplies to our Armed Forces, and for essential civilian needs.

Life-saving blood plasma is carried overseas in paper containers. Emergency Food Rations move through steaming jungle, desert heat and frigid Arctic cold—in paper containers. Vital Red Cross supplies—medicines, serums, bandages—are hurried to the four corners of the earth in paper containers. Food for American prisoners of war is delivered in paper containers.

Waste paper is made into actual implements of war, such as bomb bands, practice bombs, wing tips, airplane signals, parachute flares, ammunition chests, shell protectors, shell containers.

Here on the Home Front, too, countless essential civilian and wartime items are moving night and day via train, truck and airplane in paper containers and cartons. Food... clothing... airplane parts... tools for busy war plants... are shipped in cases, boxes and containers made from the reclaimed waste paper which you can help salvage.

YOU SHOULD SAVE

Cardboard boxes,
cartons and shipping cases
Paper bags, wrapping paper
Letters, envelopes and

THERE has been more than the usual amount of gossip as to how many boxing champions are coming along from our service forces of more than 10 million men.

Most of these have had their share of boxing instruction under the care of the best ring men any country could offer.

Most of these have been caught young and in good condition. The natural belief is that hundreds, perhaps thousands, will come along to make us forget those who have held the headlines, from John L. Sullivan to Joe Louis, from Joe Gans to Bob Montgomery.

Joe Louis

But the odds are it won't be that way.

Along this line we asked the advice of Lieut. Comdr. Jack Dempsey at his coast guard headquarters. "As close as I can figure it," Jack said, "around 30,000 men have been under our supervision in ring instruction."

"Most of them have been great boys, keen and willing. But so far as boxing goes if we could get one real, high-grade champion out of the 30,000, I'd be quite satisfied."

"These odds are actually too short," Dempsey continued. "This would mean that from an army of 10 million men we'd get 300 boxing champions. The odds are we won't get 20 ring stars. It's a tough game—the toughest of all!"

The Old Mauler is right. The high-class boxing or ring crop is the shortest parade, the smallest group, in sport.

I asked Dempsey to name the main ingredients a ring champion needs.

"First," he said, "ability to take it and ability to give it. These are about 50-50. A good fighter must be able to hand out punishment and to handle his share of the same."

"After that come speed and quick reflexes. You must see your opening and make your move in the same split second. A good fighter must have foot action and fast-moving hands. Not many have quick reflexes."

Lacking the Knack

"What about natural knack, which is hard to define or explain?" I asked.

"Knack is something I can't explain. I guess nobody else can. Jim Corbett developed his boxing skill by hard work, but most of it was born in him," replied Dempsey.

"Think it over. We've had only about 16 heavyweight champions in 60 years—from Sullivan to Louis. And a few of these were not too hot."

"Joe Louis was born with fast moving hands. Even when he was first coming up Joe could deliver three or four punches so fast you could only see one or two. I don't think I've ever seen hands move faster than Louis', considering also the power they carried. Fast hands that carry no punishment of course don't mean so much."

After all, Dempsey is confident that after the war the general boxing average will be lifted to a higher notch than it has ever known before.

An Angle on Betting

Considering the fact that all working mutual machines, plus an increasing number of bookmakers, are breaking all betting records this season, your correspondent has gone to work on the best advice one could give to the millions of dreamers who believe they can still beat 11 per cent.

You can't tell folks to stop betting—any more than you can tell them to stop breathing or stop eating.

But after a careful survey, lifted from the old-timers, there are a few details that at least may cut down their losses. And that is the big idea.

Here were the betting suggestions that a number of betting veterans offered—

1. Don't try to beat every race, with 11 per cent working against you. It can't be done.
2. Bet on the nose—or to win and show—not win and place. The show bet may protect you. Practically no old-time gambler ever kicks in with a place bet.
3. Here are the factors that must be considered—
Past performance—jockey—track condition—weight—post position—stable—and the betting price. Beating the price—the overlay—can be a big factor once in a while.
4. Duck tips and hunches.

Ruggedness of Horses

Looking over the list of retired or injured horses, a somewhat baffled non-combatant wants to know why a human athlete carries so much more ruggedness and durability than a horse.

The answer is fairly simple. I recall no human being who was ever called upon to carry from 1,000 to 1,100 pounds upon such slender underpinning. Babe Ruth was a marvel in supporting from 225 to 250 pounds upon thin ankles for 20 years.

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

ALTHOUGH Erwin Rudolph won his first pocket billiards championship in 1911, the genial cue shark is more active today than he was as a mere stripling of 30 or 35.

On Labor day of 1942, Rudolph started an exhibition tour which has taken him to army camps in all parts of the United States. His first stop was at Fort Ontario in Oswego, N. Y. From there he went to Key West, Fla., finally winding up deep in the heart of Texas the following June. So far he has visited at least 200 camps, played in 800 exhibitions and demonstrated his uncanny ability through the co-operation of Brunswick-Balke, the company which underwrites his army camp tour.

Rudolph, who will be 50 in December, started playing billiards back in 1909, when he was 15. Just a year and a half later he won the Ohio State pocket billiards championship. In 1927 he annexed his first world's championship by defeating Ralph Greenleaf 450 to 336.

Rudolph's Record

After taking the title from Greenleaf in 1927, Rudolph went on to win it again in 1930, 1933 and 1941. His last victory was at the expense of Willie Mosconi and Irving Crane, both of whom he defeated in the playoffs.

In talking to Rudolph, one gets the firm impression that he is much happier demonstrating his wares before the boys in army camps than he was—and is—in championship competition. And it isn't a question of nerves. He just likes to entertain the boys.

"It would be impossible to find a more interested and appreciative audience than the boys in the army camps," he declares. "Most of them understand the fundamentals of the game and are with the player all the time. It's worth traveling any distance just to perform for the boys."

The game of billiards is definitely on the rebound, according to Rudolph. He feels—and with justification—that it will come back strong after the war. Thousands of service men who never played before are taking an interest in the game. As many as 200 billiard tables are found in some of the camps, and as many as 2,500 men have witnessed some of his exhibitions. That this builds interest in the game is proved by the following excerpt from one of the many letters Rudolph's employers have received from commanding officers of army camps where he has appeared:

"... As you can well imagine, since Mr. Rudolph's appearance, the interest in pocket billiards has taken on new life and we truly are developing some great players."

Repeat Performances

The letters Rudolph receives speak volumes. They tell of the tremendous amount of camp interest and are almost unanimous in requesting a repeat performance.

The former champion entertains with exhibitions of both pocket billiards and trick shots. Many of the latter shots were first used by Rudolph and now are a standard fixture in other players' routines.

In talking to beginners, Rudolph emphasizes three fundamental rules. The first of these—the forming of a firm "bridge" with the left hand—he terms one of the most important factors in the game. He also cautions that the cue must be held very loosely at the balance, with the shooting arm relaxed, and finally that, when stroking the ball, the head should be kept absolutely still, as in golf.

In addition, he warns beginners to refrain from using "english"—the controlled spin imparted to the cue ball when it is stroked. "English will come naturally as you learn the game," he says. "It cannot be taught successfully."

Unlike many of the topnotch billiard players, Rudolph has refused to branch out into balkline or three-cushion billiards. He concentrates on pocket billiards, and that concentration has brought him a just reward. Always sure of himself—but far from cocky—he is known as a fast player. He plays as rapidly in tournament competition as he does during exhibitions.

Added to his other qualifications is modesty. Asked to name his choice for today's greatest pocket billiards player, he replied: "Willie Mosconi."

Boom and Collapse in Farm Land Foreseen

High Incomes, Boom Psychology Are Causes

(Editorial From The Chicago Daily News)

The boom in farm lands is under way, following almost precisely the pattern of the World War I boom that ran from 1914 to 1920 and collapsed with disastrous repercussions. Unless controls are set up to curb the boom, it may get out of hand at any moment, in the opinion of William G. Murray, professor of agricultural economics at Iowa State college, whose pamphlet, "Land Boom Controls," has just been published by the Iowa State College Press.

Three factors are responsible, according to Professor Murray. They are: (1) the record-breaking incomes received by farmers since 1939; (2) interest rates and loan charges at an all-time low, making it easy to buy on credit; (3) a land boom psychology in which the same farm may be sold several times during the year, each time at an advanced price. A high percentage of sales are to absentee owners.

This absentee owner feature might warrant the listing of a fourth reason for the boom—a "fear" psychology coexistent with the boom psychology. Professor Murray notes that many of those who are buying land for investment are doing so as a hedge against inflation. To what extent this fear may figure in the national picture cannot be determined; but certainly it is a considerable factor in inducing many city folk to invest in farm lands as insurance against the evils of inflation. Another motive is to buy a farm as a hedge against excessive income taxes. Surplus income that would otherwise be heavily taxed can be put into farm improvements or operations, and thereby escape taxation. These two aspects of hedging are sufficiently prevalent among non-farmer land buyers to warrant listing fear psychology as a fourth major factor in the rush to buy farm lands.

To the extent that they exist, the fear motives might tend to lessen the purely speculative angle of the boom and to ameliorate its evils; but the danger of a runaway land boom cannot be overlooked.

Farmers are urged to buy war bonds, or pay off their mortgages with their surplus income, not to purchase more land. Bonds are a sound investment, and they can be turned to cash readily when the war is over, thus providing liquid assets at a time when farmers will have most need of them. The depression that has followed every war in history always hits the farmers first and hardest.

Vitamin D Doubles

Hatchability of Eggs

With the government demanding 57 billion eggs and 4 billion pounds of poultry meat this year, the increased fertility and hatchability reported by two New England poultrymen is considered a valuable contribution to the food-for-victory program. These men attribute the decided increases in the last few years by their older hens to use of high-quality feed containing adequate amounts of "D"-activated animal sterol.

"The hatchability of the eggs from these hens averaged only between 40 and 50 per cent at certain seasons of the year," reported the brothers. "Today 80 per cent hatchability is not uncommon."

For more than two years the feed they used has been fortified with vitamin D, the all-important ingredient that prevents rickets and promotes health and growth of poultry. Egg-shell texture is also much improved, they say.

Buckskin and Wood Used As Local Currency in '33

During the national "banking holiday" of March, 1933, money was so scarce in some communities that local currency was issued by business men to carry on operations.

In Wallowa county, Oregon, notes were issued of real buckskin—each was stamped "Half Buck," or "One Buck." The Chamber of Commerce of Tenino, Washington, issued wooden money. It proved very popular and, in all, some 25,000 pieces were circulated in denominations of 25c, 50c, and $1. These were valued at over $6,000.

Admirals may be admirable, but that isn't where the word comes from. It comes from an old Arabic word "amir-al" meaning "commander of." That's what the Admiral is, the top-ranking officer in the Navy. Top-ranking cigarette with our Navy men is Camel—the favorite, too with men in the Army, Marines, and Coast Guard, according to actual sales records from their service stores. Camels are a top-ranking gift, too. And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard wherever they are.—Adv.

Dangerous Threat

In Turkey, a man may receive a sentence of from one to three years when he wounds another and the victim recovers. However, he receives from four to seven years when he merely threatens another with a weapon, as the results of the "threat" were never realized and the victim might have been killed.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Heat and friction are the greatest enemies of rubber. Tire treads wear out five times as fast in a temperature of 100 degrees as when the thermometer registers 40 degrees.

Rubber previously used for garden hose will provide for tires on carriages of 8,500 "75's" and 6,800 37-mm. anti-aircraft guns and 600 pontons for Army bridges.

Samuel Peal was granted the first rubber patent in England in 1791. It covered the waterproofing of leather, cotton, linen, etc.
